RE: [REDACTED]

Bayshore, New York [REDACTED]

Vehicle: 2003 Chevrolet Z71 Tahoe
Vin # : 1GNEK13Z83[REDACTED]

National Highway Traffic Safety Administration,

I am writing you in hopes you may be of some important help in the case of my vehicle.

I purchased this vehicle brand new with the confidence of driving with my family with out concern of safety, unfortunately this was not the case. This vehicle has been nothing but a concern. When first purchased the car seemed to run a little rough, but I assumed it had a break in period and drove with an uneasy feeling. As the miles progressed the vehicle seemed to get more apparent, the vehicle started to get this horrible vibration when you would come to a traffic light, the car would rumble and get worse the longer you where at the light or at any time you stopped with the car in gear. It had gotten so bad that the passengers also questioned the problem with the vehicle. This is when I began to seek help from the dealership where the vehicle was purchased. They totally dismissed that a problem even existed and sent me on my way. I was very dissatisfied with this treatment and went to another dealer and they didn't even want to look at the problem, after another dealer already pushed me away. Finally after a number of phone calls to Chevrolet customer service, to which there was no response to my concern, I took the vehicle to a few local repair shops. I was told that they do feel the vibration and yes it is not normal, but they have no idea what could be causing the problem. I am at this point very afraid to drive a vehicle that has this horrible vibration and no one knows why. At this point I took it upon myself at my own expense of $563.31 to replace the motor mounts of the engine and transmission after doing research on engine vibration and the causes. This of course was not the problem, since the vehicle still operated the same as before. My next step was again another dealer to seek an opinion. Finally the mechanic agreed this was unusual, and had not come across this problem. He kept it over night and called me to say there was a bulletin out on this vehicle with this problem but chevrolet has no fix, they state this is a exhaust system problem. My concern after all I have been through how do I really know if this is the problem and how long will it take for them to find a fix????? Will and should I have to drive this vehicle with this horrible vibration
