RE: Gas tank leak in my 2007 Corvette ZO6

JAN 26 2018

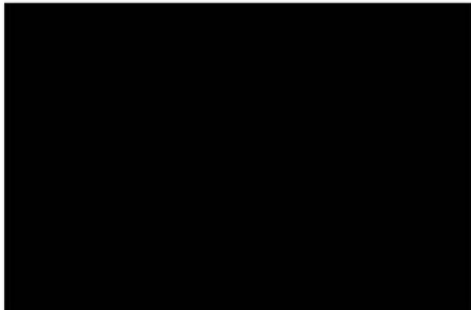

Dear Sir/Madam

Enclosed please find a copy of letter and information sent to General Motors about a gas tank leak in my Corvette that could have caused serious damage to my property or seriously injured me.

I feel you should investigate to see how many people are having a problem with these gas tanks as this failure could cause serious damage to property as well as serious injury or death to the owner

General Motors did call me today to state they would note my letter but did not indicate they would do anything about it.

I feel all gas tanks should be inspected and replaced on these cars if needed.

RE : Repair to --my 2007 Corvette ZO6 ---Vin 1G1YY26E075 [REDACTED]

Dear Sirs/Madam:

I recently had to repair my Corvette for a gas leak-- see copy of repair bill enclosed.

Car was in for other items and dealer discovered gas leak-- I had smelled gas fumes in the garage but assumed it was coming from the snow blower which I removed from the garage. This could have caused a fire. I presently own only two Corvettes recently selling two of my Corvettes when I decided to buy the new mid - engine Corvette which I am on the waiting list for. One had 315,000 original miles and the other had over 215,000 miles-- both bought new. I have owned many Corvettes and put over 200,000 on most and when we had our business we only bought Chevy Vans and put over 300,000 miles on them before they were replaced. We never had to replace a gas tank on any of these vehicles . One expects to do some repairs on vehicles as they get older but a gas tank leak can kill you. My repair costs on all G M vehicles I have owned have been minimal.

I feel you should pay for the repairs to the ZO6--- this is not a wear repair-- these parts must have been defective.

Hopping to hear from you in the near future concerning this matter.

Sincerely,
