Dear Sirs,

My name is [REDACTED] I have owned 16 Jaguars in my lifetime and am very familiar with them. I currently own three, including a 2013 XK, a 2011 XK, and a 2003 X-Type. All vehicles are currently owned by three different companies, of which I am the sole owner. These Jaguars are not drivable or usable due to total headliner collapse, and are currently off road.

After having independent labs analyze the cabin headliner glue, we now know the inhalation and oral ingestion of these compounds within a confined area under HAV systems creates an unsafe and unhealthy environment. My drivers and passengers have shown signs and symptoms ranging from persistent coughing, pneumonia, eye tumors and birth defects.

As this is an urgent matter, please have someone contact me immediately at [REDACTED] [REDACTED] or [REDACTED] can arrange to have all cars towed to my business for your inspection. Also, a full analytical laboratory report can be made available to principles only upon written request.

I look forward to your prompt response.

Dear [REDACTED]

Thank you for your letter of November 8, 2017, regarding whether certain chemicals used in automobile manufacturing may cause health effects. You specifically cite three models of Jaguar cars, with specific concern for chemicals used in adhesives for the cabin headliner.

Under the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA), as amended by the Frank R. Lautenberg Chemical Safety for the 21st Century Act, EPA is required to prioritize chemicals for risk evaluation, evaluate the safety of existing chemicals, and if unreasonable risks are identified, the statute provides authorities to address those risks.

The first step in EPA's process for evaluating the safety of existing chemicals is prioritization. Prioritization is a risk-based screening process for designating chemical substances as either High-Priority Substances for risk evaluation, or Low-Priority Substances for which risk evaluation is not warranted at the time. TSCA requires EPA to give certain preferences to prioritizing chemicals on the 2014 TSCA Work Plan, to consider certain criteria such as hazard/exposure, persistence and bioaccumulation, but otherwise does not significantly limit EPA's discretion to choose which chemicals enter the prioritization process. Once initiated, the process provides stakeholders with ample notice of any EPA risk evaluation activity, as well as two opportunities for the public to submit relevant information to the Agency. The process has been designed to ensure that the Agency's limited resources are focused on chemicals with the greatest potential for risk.

In December 2016, EPA identified an initial list of ten chemicals subject to risk evaluation under the amended TSCA. Three of these chemicals, trichloroethylene, methylene chloride, and carbon tetrachloride, were cited in the materials you forwarded with your letter, and your information has been shared with the Risk Assessment Division in the Office of Pollution Prevention and Toxics. The purpose of these ongoing risk evaluations is to determine whether the chemical substance presents an unreasonable risk to health or the environment under the conditions of use (known, intended or reasonably foreseen uses) for the chemical substance. As part of this process, EPA must evaluate both hazard and exposure, exclude consideration of costs or other non-risk factors, use scientific information and approaches in a manner that is consistent with the requirements in TSCA for the best available science, and ensure decisions are based on the weight-of-scientific-evidence.

EPA expects to complete the risk evaluations for these chemicals no later than December 2019. If at the end of the risk evaluation process, EPA determines that a chemical presents an unreasonable risk to health or the environment, the chemical must immediately move to risk management action under TSCA. EPA is required implement, via regulation, regulatory restrictions on the chemical to eliminate any unreasonable risk. The law provides a range of risk management options that EPA can apply under TSCA alone or in combination, including prohibiting, limiting or otherwise restricting manufacture, processing or distribution in commerce; prohibiting, limiting or otherwise restricting for particular use or above a set concentration; requiring minimum warnings and instructions; requiring recordkeeping, monitoring or testing; prohibiting or regulating manner or method of commercial use, prohibiting or regulating manner or method of disposal; and directing manufacturers/processors to give notice of risk to distributors and users and replace or repurchase. The law requires EPA to propose regulations to address the unreasonable risk within one year of when the risk evaluation is completed, and finalized within two years. The public would have an opportunity to comment on the proposed regulation.

Please know that EPA is conducting a thorough and rigorous analysis of the chemicals identified for risk evaluation under TSCA, including the three chemicals you mentioned. To keep informed of our work, both risk evaluation and risk management of these chemicals, please visit the following websites. These websites will be updated as EPA continues its scientific and regulatory work.
