I just checked and there have been no reports of sudden engine failure with the 2021 Acura RDX. This indicates to me that Acura has found their problem and corrected it for the 2021 model year. The 2021 models were probably offered for sale in August, so there has been sufficient time to insure the fix worked. I can not believe Acura would continue to manufacture a car with such liability exposure.

This is my third Acura SUV which I first purchased (in 2003) because a client and his wife were in a horrific auto accident. The client said the safety features of the Acura saved their lives. I have never had any reliability or safety problems until the current purchase. My wife is the primary driver and she will not use the RDX if there is any amount of rain. She does not want me to drive if there is rain. The vehicle is not providing the usefulness for which it was manufactured.

I have not consulted an attorney, but I feel I would be successful in a civil lawsuit. I believe Acura has identified and corrected their safety issue with the RDX. Please require Acura to recall and fix the vehicles experiencing sudden engine failure.

Please acknowledge receipt of my email.
