NARRATIVE:

Airbags did not deploy upon impact when '84 Toyota (4DSW) executing a left turn at a speed of 20-25 mph (failed to yield right of way) collided with '99 Hyundai (2DS) traveling straight-a-way at approximately 40 mph, resulting in damages to the front and near-front area(s) of Hyundai. (See attached Police Report File #99-78112)

Neck pains sustained by Hyundai driver were not reported to the police or to a physician.

Repairs and replacements to damages of Hyundai were to the front/near-front area(s). Hyundai claims airbags are designed to deploy in frontal or near-frontal collisions which are comparable to hitting a solid barrier in excess of 12 mph. (Copies of correspondence dated March 10, 2000 from Hyundai Motor America and report from Precision Auto Body attached)

The matter(s) in question is [1] should the airbags have been deployed upon impact given the above-mentioned description of the accident? [2] Can Hyundai assure me the airbags are functionable since I do not have any documentation verifying the airbags have been tested and would be operable? [3] Are the airbags defective? [4] Would the airbags deploy should an accident - in a similar nature - occur again?

For the records I did not file claim for damages as stated by Hyundai in its letter of March 10, 2000.
