Woman Posts Her Spontaneously Combusting [redacted]

The flames reduce the truck to rubble.

There are few things as dramatic as seeing a car catch fire. Maybe it's the [redacted] of [redacted] blockbusters that have primed the adrenal glands for a massive explosion that quickens the heart rate in anticipation. Regardless, such a sight is often stunning – one that compels many to pull out their phones and record the incident. That's what one [redacted] user did, recording dramatic videos of her [redacted] going up in flames.

The woman posted [redacted] the incident, showing where the fire started, how it spread, and what was left. The [redacted] shows fire sprouting through the hood and shooting out from the front wheel wells. The [redacted] is much more dramatic, showing the pickup fully engulfed. The front tires are popped, and the doors have melted off, revealing a burning interior. The last bit of the car's exterior untouched is the rear bedside fender.

However, the [redacted] shows the true devastation. Little survived, with the front bumper and massive engine being all that really remained. The entire exterior burned away, as did the interior – the metal seat frames are visible. According to the woman, her husband remote started the [redacted] truck, came out, backed it up, and heard a pop. He got out, opened the hood, and noticed the flames in the engine bay. The woman says the truck was leaking diesel fuel, and the video does show a trail of mysterious fluid, though a full investigation is needed to discover the true cause.

quarterback this but I imagine hooking anything to the back of the trailer and just pulling/dragging it back [redacted] with another vehicle, even on a broken jack better than losing the boat for the year.... See More

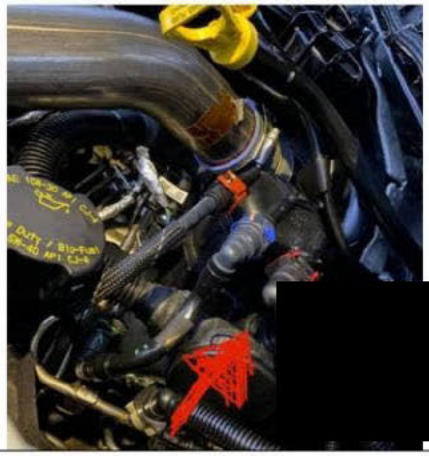
Any[redacted] else swapping their factory "fire starter" kits out [redacted]? Big trip to [redacted] pulling the [redacted] [redacted]. Last filter change was o[redacted]. Having good high volume diesel stations close by is nice.

Who else is headed camping this weekend?

[redacted]

Today was a ne[redacted] for me. Ended up on the side of the hwy after my truck went into limp mode and started smelling fuel then started smoking. Called the wife and watched my truck smoke till she got there then pulled it to the next exit. Once I looked I noticed the fuel supply line was off but the red retaining clip wasn't off broken or loose. Clipped it back [redacted] and went the the auto store and replace my fuel filter for safe measure. It's been [redacted] months since iv messed with my filters so its not like I just didn't get it on all the way and I drive [redacted]. Luckily my [redacted] didn't catch fire. But has any[redacted] had [redacted] of those hoses come loose without the clip letting loose or breaking seems a little off to me and paranoid now..



Is there an after market fuel filter that isn't plastic and removes the risk for catching fire?

I am pretty sure I have figured out why some of these trucks catch on fire. I have a [redacted] and a [redacted] the [redacted] of these trucks have sprung a major leak in the top of the fuel filter in the exact same place. Has anybody else run into this issue? Btw these are not cheap aftermarket replacements. The local [redacted] dealer does all of the maintenance on these trucks.

Apparently a diesel hose broke and it caught on fire. Fortunately my driver extinguished the fire fast. Has anything like this happened to any of you?

That's a preliminary parts list that my mechanic has done waiting for the insurance to say that he can start disassembling. They told me that they have to figure out if there's any recall on that or still in any kind of warranty.

[redacted] quickly extinguished a fire that started in the engine compartment that was extending to the passenger area of a pickup truck towing [redacted]

The roadway was closed for a short period of time.

There were no injuries [redacted]
