Has anyone had problems with M2's having excessive vibrations with the mirrors while driving down the road? Lately the M2's coming in when we take for a test drive under PDI you can't see anything in the primary mirrors due to shaking to much? Thank you

Im gonna go check one out. But I used to have this problem years ago and torqing the top pivot usually helps, I believe its a hex bolt

We have been having problems with just the mirror head not the arm. The arm seems to be tight and the spot/secondary mirror is what you have to rely on when driving.

I wonder if there is excessive vibration causing the vibration that can be detected by a driveline analyzer.

Maybe the ride height is set too high and, I don't know, it's causing a tougher ride and that's causing the vibration.

did you ever get a resolution? We have ordered 4 mirrors out of the PDC and every one has a wobble on the mirror head and there is no way to tighten it. When it goes down the road it wobbles back and forth. part number A22-74243-048

M2 mirror shake

I just went and talked with the lead salesman on this. He hasn't heard anything and is going to check with a DSM on this again. We still haven't had a fix to this at our facility. Sadly we have been sending them out. I will check again in a couple days give you an update.

We ended up taking the mirror apart and inserting a high strength glue at the spot that was loose and haven't heard any more issues with it. not a true fix but it worked for us. Seems to be a manufacturing defect.

I haven't heard of anything from the DSM or the salesman. But we have had a lot of M2's come thru for awhile now without a problem. So I am not sure who's issue it is or was and who changed what, whoever makes the mirror or Freightliner.

Western Star has had a mirror vibration for sometime since they started using Hadley mirrors. See SS1034409 <https://www.dtnasolutions.com/docs/DOC-1034409>

Not sure if it is the same but may help
